MARTHA WASHINGTON GERANIUMS—Azalea-Flowered Types—
One of the most useful and beautiful summer flowering plants. The named varieties listed herein are producing good, dark green foliage covered with the many azalea-like blossoms of lovely shadings.

The Martha Washington geraniums will thrive in any soil with a reasonable amount of good drainage and sunshine. Prune upon completion of flowering period and fertilize in the early spring with a light dose of Vigoro or Gaviota fertilizer.

Near the seacoast there is no flower that will produce the array of color, with the least amount of care, during the summer months.

In this list, we have attempted to describe verbally the color shadings in the flower according to the name under which it is now known, but no one can do justice to the flowers by a verbal description.

To a California Geranium

I know a tiny Geranium
That lives at the bend of the road,
Pointing the way to the traveler—
The one with heavy load—
Saying: "My friend, take the hill road,
The air that way is divine.
The toil of the day will seem lighter
As onward and upward you climb.
The strength you need will be given
Step by step on the way,
And your burdens will turn into singing
When you rest at the close of the day."
There in the warmth of the sunshine
This little geranium grows.
Happy to be of service,
Not asking to be a rose.
